RP airports step up security for 'swallowed explosives'

AVIATION authorities said yesterday they were stepping up security procedures at Philippine airports for concern over the possibility of terrorism, or persons with criminal or other intentions, posing as passengers to enter the country.

They said the security measures were put in place to prevent a repeat of the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks in the United States, which resulted in the deaths of more than 3,000 people.

"Measures involving the use of liquid explosives and simple timing devices as used by the terrorists operating in the Philippines are indicative of the new type of terrorism that may develop," said a security director at Manila airport that was made available to the press.

"The possibility of terrorism, or persons with criminal or other intentions, posing as passengers to enter the country, is a real threat," he added.

The director also suggested that passengers could use methods "similar to the techniques used by drug traffickers." Drug traffickers have been known to use the same techniques to smuggle goods of narcotics in their luggage or in the bodies of their passengers to avoid detection at airport. Another director has recently stepped up security checks, including X-rays and body searches. Hand-carrying bags have also been inspected.

Manila airport is one of the busiest in the world and pulled out its troops to help last month, the United States had conducted the Philippines a key ally in the war on terrorism.

Washington has also expressed concern over training and capacity maintained by the Armed Forces of the Philippines in the southern Philippines island of Mindanao.

The new counter-terror group is a Southeast Asian group of the Al Qaeda network based in the Philippines, the United States.

5 churches in Iraq bombed; 15 killed

BAGHDAD, MOBILE—Car bombs exploded outside an Iraqi Christian church in Iraq on Monday, killing more than a dozen people and wounding many more in an apparently coordinated attack aimed to intimidate with exploding weapons.

"We are expecting a large number of casualties," an interior ministry source said, saying the fact that five churches in Baghdad had been targeted was a sign of the Islamic extremists' intent.

Witnesses in Mosul said they knew of just one church destroyed.

Explosive violence beginning the night has killed 34, including six American soldiers, and wounded 150. The toll included a woman kneeling outside a Mosul police station Monday that killed five people and wounded 10, and a church in Baghdad between US troops and insurgents that killed 12 troops and wounded 39 others.

The violence continued the blast—the first attack on churches during the US month-long presence—echoing concerns among Iraqis that they feared to influence religious tensions.

In the deadliest attack, a suicide car bomber drove into the east gate of a Christian church in southern Baghdad before detonating his vehicle, killing at least 12 people at worshippers and the building, witnesses said.

The US military has warned that guerrillas often target the presence of more than 150,000 foreign troops may try to disrupt religious tensions in their operations to destabilize Iraq.

"It is a terrible and emerging phenomenon to see first target that Christian churches are being targeted in Iraq," said William Dwyer, spokesman for the US State Department.

A US military spokesman said three of the five churches destroyed were in Mosul, a city where religious tensions have been a source of conflict.

The series of explosions—at least five of them are bombings—began after 6 p.m. Sunday as police officers gathered near the site.

Confusion over 7 hostages as Kenya reports release

NAIROBI—Doctors and families that were rescued from the Kenyan Embassy in Iraq had been released and were in the Kenyan Embassy, but the statement was immediately denied by an Egyptian official and by the company that employs them.

"I am pleased to announce that the three Kenyans, together with four other hostages from other countries, have this afternoon been released," Kenyan Foreign Minister Chuma said.

"They are right now in Baghdad in the safe custody of the Egyptian Embassy and they will be in the next few hours to be flown to Beirut, where they will be received by our ambassador to the United States and his team," he said.

"They are in very good health," Mubarek added.

"This is a great achievement for the country," Mubarek said in a speech. "It is a victory for our people."

"We worked day and night to ensure that our hostages eventually in Iraq, but we have been successful in releasing them."

"They have not been released," Mubarek said. "If they were, we would have been able to release them."

An Egyptian official also denied that any hostages were safely inside his country's embassy in Baghdad.

IN PROTEST OF THE CONSUMER AND OIL PRICE WATCH (COPW) STATEMENTS ON PETROLEUM PRICES

The Consumer and Oil Price Watch (COPW) had issued various statements that we deem misleading, and had issued false expectations on the price movement of petroleum products.

The COPW had reported that petroleum prices had gone down, as in the case of diesel, from P 34.42 to P 34.41 on July 31, 2006, for which a collapse in pump prices should have been expected.

When the COPW failed to appreciate the substantial under-recovery of P 1.741, it led to the issue of diesel that we, the independent oil players, had been ensuring up to that period. Diesel prices in the world market had risen to 25.5% of what it was in January, 2002. The price had dropped 9.5%, while our Wholesale Petrol Price (WPP) had recovered only 11.5% in the same period. The magnitude of the sacrifice made by the independent oil companies is very clear and beyond question.

With the average WPP for July '06 amounting to P 4.43, the recovery was only 1.741, or 39.5% of what it was in January, 2002. The price had dropped 9.5%, while our Wholesale Petrol Price (WPP) had recovered only 11.5% in the same period. The magnitude of the sacrifice made by the independent oil companies is very clear and beyond question.

Diana fountain bugged by bad luck, poor plans

LONDON—It was meant to be the perfect tribute to the "people's princess"—a pool of water designed for children to drink, to allow them a small taste of the royal life.

But the Royal Palace in London's Hyde Park has been plagued by a series of bad luck and expensive poor planning.

The fountain, which was designed by the architect Sir John Soane, was supposed to be a small-scale fountain for children to drink from.

Sustainable housing for everyone

By Kenneth R. Jernigan, PhD

RENTABLE. development means that the present needs of the current generation is responsibility being met without sacrificing the ability of the next generation to meet their needs. In housing development, it is the environmental friendliness that has become the symbol of responsible building.

What is an environmental friend?
Is he or she? It is a person that not only loves the world, but also the environment.

The responsible bodies, aware of the risks of the current situation in connection with the economy, should look at the following aspects of development:

AMS Environmental Solutions—The builder notes that all of the construction processes would not disrupt the environment at all or if noted be avoided, given minimal impact.

egg, the insulating system of the house would make sure the heat being brought into the house mainly through the roof is retained so that the house is comfortable enough. In winter climates, the insulation keeps the occupants warm. The effect of insulation is reduced air conditioning and heating bills.

• Solar Water Heater—The solar heater produces hot water with the use of solar energy alone, by reducing the consumption of electricity. Solar panels are commonly placed on the roof of a house and store solar energy. Although the initial cost of a solar water heating system is high, it might be cheaper in the long run. To estimate how the actual savings you could get by using one, it is best to consult your dealer or the market.

• Rapid Water Treatment Systems—Many years ago, dirty water was simply brought back to the environment through rivers and open drainage lines. But today, they have to be treated before they can be brought back to the ground. By gravel treatment, it is made sure that dirty water does not recontaminate the ground when
